

The John C Stennis Institute of Government

The State Executive Development Institute (SEDI) is an annual educational workshop offered by the John C. Stennis Institute of Government. The SEDI is designed to prepare mid- to upper-level state and local government executives to be more effective leaders. A broad range of topics are presented by government officials, researchers, and instructors in order to provide participants a well-rounded and applicable curriculum. The SEDI curriculum includes cutting-edge management theory, organizational development concepts and techniques, administrative and applied management techniques, and a variety of other related and timely topics.

Held on the campus of Mississippi State University, SEDI brings many of the unique resources found on the university campus to the program. SEDI meets requirements of the Mississippi State Personnel Board Certified Public Manager Program and participants may also receive three graduate level hours in Public Policy Administration at Mississippi State University upon completion of the program.

A maximum of 30 participants are chosen to attend SEDI each year, based on applicants' professional experience and responsibilities. Priority for admission is given to Mississippi's senior state and local officials. Tuition for SEDI 2010 is $1350, and includes all program sessions, instructional materials, and accommodations.
